The term "goals per minute" is commonly used in football to describe a player's performance, and is calculated by dividing the total number of goals scored by the number of minutes played. In other words, a player who scores 20 goals in 10 matches would have a goals per minute of 2, while a player who scores 20 goals in 30 matches would have a goals per minute of 0.67. Therefore, the lower the goals per minute, the better the player's performance. This metric is generally considered to be more accurate than simply looking at the total number of goals scored, as it takes into account the amount of time a player spent on the field.
