Although historically the government has had a restrictive posture towards the game, in the current various states have begun to allow and regulate sports betting in their territories. Currently, there are six states in Brazil that allow sports betting: Rio de Janeiro, São Paulo, Minas Gerais, Santa Catarina, Paraná and Rio Grande do Sul. This opening towards sports betting occurs in a context in which Brazil is preparing to host the FIFA World Cup in 2026. It is expected that the legalization and regulation of the sports betting market will generate significant income for the government and help to combat the illegal activity in this sector. It is important to remember that, although these states allow sports betting, there are still restrictions and specific regulations that must be followed. Therefore, if you are interested in participating in sports betting in Brazil, it is fundamental that you inform yourself about the laws and local regulations.
